Top officials of the Armed Forces are helping to level arguments that the Services engage in too much bickering. They have cited many examples of interservice cooperation in the missile programs of the Army, Navy and Air Force.

Spotlight Services

Six special House Armed Services Subcommittees will explore every nook and cranny of the Defense establishment in the weeks just ahead. The result is expected to be new legislation and recommendations involving roles and missions, Defense organization, interservice rivalry and the future strengths of each Service.

Army Promotions

The Army this week released the names of officers promoted to colonel, lieutenant colonel, major and captain. They will have 11 February dates of rank.

The New Navy

Career prospects for Navy submarine officers are brighter. Admiral Arleigh A. Burke says the Navy of the future will have more submarines, fewer aircraft. The CNO reports nearly all combatant ships will have an anti-submarine capability.

Regular AF Appointments

More than 3,000 Air Force Reserve officers are expected to be named for Regular ranks in new selection action. Applications can be made starting 1 March.

Reserve Plan Faces Change

Substantial revisions are in prospect for the Pentagon's proposed term-retention contract plan for Reserve officers.

One possible change may make it mandatory for the Services to give contracts to all active-duty Reservists.

Another revision may force the Pentagon to pay for broken contracts.

These are some of the possibilities being explored in staff conferences as the Brooks House Armed Services Subcommittee prepares to launch full-scale hearings on 17 February.

The first witness to be called by the committee will be Secretary of Defense

100,000 Reserve Officers Turn Down Regular Army, Air Force Commissions

Thousands of Army and Air Force Reserve officers have passed up the opportunity to be integrated as Regulars.

In a report submitted to the Brooks House Armed Services Subcommittee on Reserve Affairs, the Army has disclosed that it received only 21,500 applications for Regular commissions under the Augmentation Act "out of a Reserve officer strength of 77,000 on active duty and with all Reserve officers in or out of Service eligible."

The Air Force also said there was a "lack of interest" on the part of a number of highly qualified Air Force Reserve officers.

A spokesman for the Air Force told THE JOURNAL that approximately 110,000 Reserve officers were eligible for augmentation, and 60,000 applied.

Under the Augmentation Act, the Congress authorized the Army to go to a Regular officer strength of 49,500 and the Air Force to 69,425. Temporarily, however, these figures were restricted by Presidential action to 40 per cent.

The Army set an original goal for 36 per cent Regular officers and planned under this authority to augment 7,000 Reservists. This would have provided a Regular officer strength of 35,640 on 1 July 1958.

Double-Barreled Pay Action Set; Hill Hearings May Boost Cost

MILITARY pay raise hearings begin in the House on 17 February, with Senate action slated to start eight days later.

The twin hearings point up the priority status of the $518,000,000 legislation on Capitol Hill.

At the kickoff of the hearings, chances for enactment of a pay raise are seen at least 50-50.

The odds are less, but still good, that Congress will raise the cost of the increases, notably by providing at least $41,000,000 for retired military personnel.

That is the pricetag of the 6 per cent minimum increase being asked by the Administration for everyone with over two years active duty.

There is little doubt that some other changes will be made in the Pentagon legislation, possibly by a revision of the step-in-grade proposal in a compromise with the present longevity system.

The pay bill, based on the Cordier Committee recommendations, would substitute the step-in-grade system for the longevity approach.

Capitol action will begin in the afternoon

Marine Corps Barred From Buying Weapon That Would Help "Vertical Envelopment"

The "Buy American" Act and the Armed Forces Procurement Regulations are prohibiting the Marine Corps from ordering a weapon that it wants to bolster striking power.

In an interview with THE JOURNAL, Brig. Gen. Samuel R. Shaw, Marine Corps Deputy Chief of Staff for Research and Development, revealed that the Corps "is watching with interest" the German UNIMOG. Built by Mercedes-Benz, it is described as an all-purpose combat vehicle.

The R&D Chief said the lightweight, cross-country truck, which has been demonstrated at the Marine Corps Development Center, Quantico, Va., is particularly suited to Leatherneck needs since it is light enough to dove-tail with the Corps' "vertical envelopment" doctrine.

The Marine Corps legal section explained, however, that the Corps is prevented from making purchases of the versatile vehicle by the "Buy American" Act which bars the Armed Forces from buying foreign-made products for use in the United States when the purchase is inconsistent with the public interest or would unreasonably increase the cost.

The law is designed to protect the American manufacturer and workingman.

Only limited numbers may be bought for test purposes. Under this law, General

PLATO PROGRESSES IN JUPITER'S WAKE

Distant Warning, Page 27

The Army this week, hard on the heels of the successful flight of its Jupiter-C Explorer satellite, told of successful tests on key components of Project Plato.

This is the mobile anti-missile missile system designed to use the Nike-Zeus missile, also under development by the Army, in the defense of overseas military installations of both the U. S. and our Allies.

Sylvania Electric Products, Inc., prime contractor on the project for the Army Ordnance Corps, began working almost four years ago on the Plato system. Don G. Mitchell, Sylvania chairman and president, said that in order to solve the anti-missile missile problem, "completely new approaches have to be conceived and developed, in addition to the application of some of the most advanced technology in the electronics field."

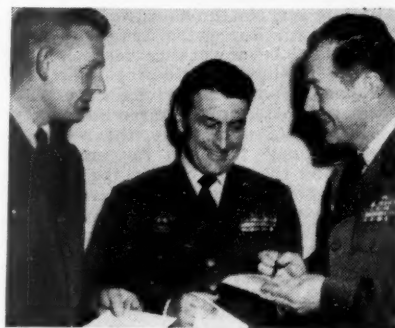

Lt. Gen. James M. Gavin, Chief of Army Research and Development, said: "The Army is responsible for developing, procuring and operating point defense surface-to-air missiles to be employed against enemy piloted aircraft and missiles of all types. This system, although basically a tactical weapon for our field armies, is also of vital importance to our overseas allies."

The multi-million-dollar program is under the technical supervision of Redstone Arsenal, Huntsville, Ala., and the contract supervision of the Boston Ordnance District.

Because of the magnitude of the project, facilities of other electronic companies have been utilized on a subcontract basis, including those of General Electric Company, Pittsfield, Mass.; American Machine and Foundry, Stamford, Conn., and Sanders Associates, Nashua, N. H.

CNO CITES CORDINER PAY NEED

Admiral Arleigh A. Burke, Chief of Naval Operations, has told the House Armed Services Committee that the rewards for proficiency and merits as envisioned by the Cordiner pay bill are "highly desirable."

Here is what the CNO had to say on the subject of the increasing need for high-quality personnel in the Navy:

"Having the most modern Navy in the world will avail us nothing unless that Navy is manned by high quality, trained personnel. Our need for high-caliber officers and high-caliber men increases each year.

"Ships, aircraft, weapons, and equipment have of necessity become more complex. They require more maintenance and a higher level of technical skill on the part of those who maintain them. It takes more skillful pilots to fly the newest aircraft.

"High-power radars and complex computers need meticulous maintenance and intelligent handling of the information that come from them. Many of our talented and experienced officers and men are being lost from the Navy to accept more remunerative positions.

"The new pay system proposed by Mr. Cordiner's committees would reward proficiency and merit. This is a highly desirable feature towards enabling us to retain our skilled personnel. The support of Congress is needed in this important problem."

Interservice Cooperation Benefits Armed Forces In Missile Programs

ARGUMENTS that the Armed Forces engage in harmful interservice rivalry have been leveled by numerous examples of interservice cooperation which top Defense officials have given to the House Armed Services Committee.

Secretary of the Air Force James H. Douglas told the Committee there has been "a large measure" of such cooperation in the research and development of missiles.

He said "The Sidewinder missile, for example, an effective air-to-air missile developed by the Navy, is carried by Air Force aircraft today. The Navy is using the Air Force developed X-17 test missile for testing components of the Navy's Polaris missile program. The Air Force is providing the rocket engines powering the Army's Redstone and Jupiter missiles."

And, he said, "the structural studies and airframe developments in the Air Force's Thor missile have been utilized by the Army to modify the airframe of the Army's Jupiter missile. Similarly, information revealed by Jupiter tests have provided data useful to the Thor program."

Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Air Garrison Norton told the Committee "The Air Force, the Army and the Navy have been working very closely on the matter of solid-propellant development, with full exchange of information between the three Services."

He said, "Furthermore, the Navy is tremendously indebted to both the Army and the Air Force in the matter of the guidance of the Polaris. And there, again, there has been full exchange. We are benefiting enormously in our Polaris development by the Air Force and the Army developments in guidance systems."

Secretary Norton said the guidance systems of all three Services in ballistic missiles "are being tested at a Naval facility—the Naval Ordnance Test Station, at China Lake, Calif."

Dr. John Hagen, Director of the Navy Vanguard Project, said the project "has always been a tri-Service project." The Army, he said, has been working with the Navy on the tracking phase of the project, and the Air Force through the launchings at the Air Force missile test center. The Army Laboratory at Ft. Monmouth, N. J., is conducting the "cloud-cover experiment," which is one of six experiments to be conducted by Vanguard.

Admiral Arleigh A. Burke, Chief of Naval Operations, also pointed out that the Navy has "taken advantage of the progress which has been made in the missile programs of our sister Services. We use many of the components in our missiles which have been developed by the other Services. There has been very close interservice cooperation in all missile programs."

Ft. Hood Receives First Missile Unit

The arrival of the 523d Field Artillery Rocket Battalion (Corporal) from Ft. Bliss, Tex., 5 February marked the first guided missile unit to be stationed at Ft. Hood, Tex.

Already at Ft. Hood were the 86th Field Artillery Rocket Battalion, recently arrived from Ft. Sill, Okla., and the 634th Rocket Battalion. Both of these are Honest John Rocket units.

The 523d will be commanded by Maj. Rex H. Hampton, who arrived at Hood last November.

Double-Barreled Pay Action On Hill

From first page—

of 17 February when Secretary of Defense Neil H. McElroy and General Nathan F. Twining, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, go before a House Armed Services Subcommittee, under Representative Paul J. Kilday (D-Tex.).

A tentative schedule calls for testimony the next day by Assistant Secretary of Defense William H. Francis, jr.

Mr. Francis, who is the Pentagon manpower boss, would be followed on 19 February by President Ralph J. Cordiner of the General Electric Company.

Subsequent testimony will be given by the Secretaries of the Army, Navy and Air Force and the Service Chiefs.

Senate Hearings Set

Before the House group is able to complete action, a Senate Armed Services Subcommittee, under Senator John Stennis (D-Miss), which has held a single day's hearing on pay legislation, will launch a detailed study of military compensation.

Pentagon observers are encouraged by the fact that there appears to be strong bi-partisan support for a military pay raise effective 1 July 1958, with virtually no opposition.

Although Mr. Kilday has yet to make any detailed statements on the pay measure, he is known to be in favor of a pay adjustment.

Authority that he is on the subject of military pay, Representative Kilday can be expected to sponsor some changes in the Administration bill.

It is not inconceivable that these changes will take the form of providing increases for retired persons and making some adjustments in the step-in-grade proposals, possibly by providing more increases for continued service within a specific grade.

It is to be noted also that the pay legislation, as sent to Congress, will in the long run reduce the pay of some ranks for men with extended service in grade. The 6 per cent adjustment and a "savings clause" will prevent losses to any person now on active duty.

EM To Officer Problem

Considerable discussion can be anticipated on the matter of pay for enlisted men with perhaps six or more years service who win commissions. As the bill now stands, these persons could sustain a pay loss in shifting from enlisted to officer ranks.

Secretary McElroy, who has been briefed at length on the current manpower problems of all the Services, will make a strong presentation to the House Subcommittee next week.

The fact that he has made a favorable impression in his appearances before the full House Armed Services Committee augurs well for Mr. McElroy's pay raise testimony.

Unlike his predecessor, Secretary Charles E. Wilson, Mr. McElroy has not been forced by Bureau of the Budget pressure to be cautious in endorsing the need for a pay increase for members of the Armed Forces.

Before he was confirmed by the Senate, Mr. McElroy declared that he would give the pay proposals developed by "my friend," Mr. Cordiner, full study.

The Secretary reviewed the pay situation as a priority matter and came to the conclusion that remedial action was needed urgently.

Backed by President Eisenhower, he is now in a position to go before Congressional Committees with full-powered statements in support of the new pay plan.

No Wraps On Chairman

Similarly, General Twining will be under no wraps in telling the House Subcommittee next week of the relationship of the new pay structure to the goal of maximum combat readiness at minimum personnel costs.

As Chief of Staff of the Air Force, General Twining was in the forefront of the drive to win approval for a revised system of military compensation.

In addition to pay, Secretary McElroy and General Twining probably will discuss in broad outline the steps that have been taken or are being considered to improve manpower management.

Full documentation, however, probably will be left to Assistant Secretary Francis.

Promotion Changes

It is not certain whether the pay testimony will bring out full details of a plan now receiving Defense Department consideration to seek legislative authority for "selection for retention" of officers with 20 or more years service, both Regulars and Reserve; forced separation of permanent officers below O-5 rank with 26 years service and 5 years in rank; and retirement of brigadier generals and rear admirals lower half with 30 years service and 5 years in permanent grade.

Another feature of the proposal, known to be favored more by the Navy and Air Force than the Army, would authorize out-of-line permanent promotions, as well as temporary advancements.

It seems likely that these matters, as well as Pentagon RIF policies, will be brought to light during the action on the pay legislation.

Thousands Spurn Regular Commissions

From first page—

An additional 18,511 officers were appointed or are being appointed last month and this month. Approximately 2,100 others will be appointed in the grades of major, captain and lieutenant during the year.

By 30 June 1958 or early in fiscal '59, the Air Force expects to have a Regular officer strength of approximately 48,000. This will leave the Air Force approximately 2,000 short of its end fiscal year '58 goal.

"This shortage," the Air Force said, "is due to the stringent criteria utilized by the Air Force for appointment in the Regular Air Force and the lack of interest by a number of highly qualified Reserve officers."

By the end of this month, the Air Force will have appointed, under the Augmentation Act, approximately the following number of officers in the permanent grades indicated:

Major .....	2,010
Captain .....	10,780
1st Lt .....	5,121
2d Lt .....	2,650

Between 1 March and 1 September, 2100 others will be augmented in the grades of major, captain and first lieutenant. Between 1 July and 31 December, approximately 1500 second lieutenants will be given Regular commissions.

The Air Force said it does not contemplate making any appointments in the permanent grade of lieutenant colonel.

In its report to the House Committee, the Air Force said "It is interesting to note that only one Reserve officer who would qualify for the permanent grade of lieutenant colonel applied for augmentation."

Roles And Missions, Combat Forces, Pentagon Organization, Manpower, Interservice Rivalry Share Spotlight In New Probe

The roles and missions of the Armed Forces, the Pentagon hierarchy, the combat capabilities of the Army, Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps, and many other important aspects of national defense will be brought under a new Congressional spotlight this month—six spotlights, to be exact.

Chairman Carl Vinson (D-Ga.) of the House Armed Services Committee has created six special subcommittees to probe every nook and cranny of the giant U. S. military establishment.

The investigations constitute "phase two" of the Committee's current inquiry into the military posture of the Nation. Hearings will get underway as soon as "phase one," involving a study of the broad problems of the missile-satellite field, is concluded, probably next week.

Chairman Vinson and Representative Leslie J. Arends (R-Ill.), the ranking minority member, will serve as ex-officio members of each of the special subcommittees.

Hearings will be held behind closed-doors, but transcripts of the testimony will be released after classified material has been deleted by the Defense Department.

The Subcommittee Chairmen, all Democrats, are Representatives Overton Brooks (La.), Paul J. Kilday (Tex.), Carl T. Durham (N.C.), L. Mendel Rivers (S.C.), Philip J. Philbin (Mass.), and F. Edward Hebert (La.).

Here are details about the areas which each of the special subcommittees will investigate:

Study Strength And Capabilities

The Brooks Subcommittee, with Mr. Charles F. Ducander as counsel, will study (1) the adequacy of the strengths of each of the Armed Forces and Reserve components to meet assigned missions, (2) the soundness of a stable force concept for the foreseeable future, (3) present combat capabilities of each of the Services, including their major combatant forces, and (4) the capability of U. S. military forces to wage nuclear, conventional, limited and/or total war.

Probe Roles And Missions

The Kilday Subcommittee, with Mr. John R. Blandford as counsel, will examine the National Security Act to ascertain if the Department of Defense is properly organized, and investigate (1) unification, (2) the soundness of the Joint Chiefs of Staffs system, and (3) the roles and missions of the Services.

Continue Missile Probe

The Durham Subcommittee, with Mr. Robert W. Smart as counsel, will continue to study the status and progress of the missile program, including satellites, anti-missile missiles, projects in outer space and related matters.

Examine Base Structure

The Rivers Subcommittee, with Mr. Philip W. Kelleher as counsel, will investigate continental and overseas bases, the adequacy of these bases and the Military Air Transport Service, and the contribution of our Allies to the defense of the free world.

Look At Budget Problems

The Philbin Subcommittee, with Mr. Lloyd Kuhn and Mr. Raymond Wilcove as counsels, will investigate the adequacy of the budget for national defense and the policy of withholding national defense funds appropriated by the Congress.

Interservice Disputes

The Hebert Subcommittee, with Mr. John J. Courtney as counsel, will investigate (1) the adequacy of the military logistics program, including procurement policies and actions of the national defense establishment, (2) the adequacy of strategic reserves, including stockpiles of strategic materials, tools and industrial reserves, (3) the matter of interservice disputes and rivalries, including the effect of industry thereon, (4) scientists, technologists, engineers and education, as they relate to national defense, (5) methods of encouraging greater advances in scientific knowledge insofar as it relates to defense matters, and (6) classification and dissemination of information.

The investigations will cover a period of more than a month. When they are completed and reports are in, the full Committee is expected to draft important new legislation in many of the fields covered by the studies, and to recommend changes within the Defense Department which can be made by administrative action.

NAVY SUPPORTS GROUND ROLE

Army spokesmen who have long extolled the view that wars will continue to be decided on the ground, have now received the backing of the Navy's top officer.

Admiral Arleigh A. Burke has told the House Armed Services Committee "we in the Navy recognize that the final decision in a war comes from the infantryman—the man who is there, sometimes with a bayonet, but he is the man that does the final controlling."

The CNO said wars cannot be controlled by "weapons of mass destruction."

ARPA DIRECTIVE

Here is the directive establishing the Department of Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency, to be headed on 1 April by Mr. Roy Johnson, former Vice President of General Electric:

IV. EFFECTIVE DATE

This directive is effective immediately.

Legal Tangle Garbles ARPA

Establishment of the Defense Department Advanced Research Projects Agency was confused last week by a Congressional legal-language entanglement.

The JOURNAL reported (8 February) that Congress had denied Secretary McElroy authority to establish a Pentagon "Agency" to handle such projects.

Shortly after the article went to press, Chairman Carl Vinson (D-Ga.) made a statement on the floor of the House.

He said House-Senate conferees had agreed to language "which would grant the authorities needed by the Secretary of Defense to perform the important research and development functions relating to antimissile missile, satellite and outer-space projects without, however, and the committee wishes to render this entirely clear, establishing an agency within the Department of Defense or in the Office of the Secretary of Defense."

Would Not Increase Powers

The next day, Chairman Vinson clarified his earlier statement by pointing out that the new language gave the Secretary no authority to "create a statutory office."

He said, "It merely gives the Secretary of Defense certain powers. If he wants to exercise these powers within the framework of an Advanced Research Projects Agency or any other agency, he has the administrative authority to do it, now that we, by law, have given him the authority to contract with private business entities, educational or research institutions, and so forth."

Mr. Vinson said Secretary McElroy's establishment of an agency "would not increase his powers one bit. The powers are the picture, and the agency is merely the frame."

Efficient Way To Do Job

He added, "In fact, the Secretary told me yesterday that he proposed to set up an agency, and I think this is an efficient way to get the job done."

The difference in the two points of view apparently lies in the words "statutory office."

The House Armed Services Committee previously had contended that the Secretary had no authority to create such an agency. Recognizing the need for the agency, however, the members decided to write a special provision into the supplemental military construction authorization bill granting the necessary authority.

Representative Paul J. Kilday (D-Tex.), who acted as the Committee's floor manager for the amendment said at the time: "If he can create this Agency without statutory authority, then he can create a hundred more. But if we approve this by statutory authority we have not recognized his right to create another single one."

SecDef Has No Authority

The House approved the amendment, but when the measure went to conference with the Senate, the Senate conferees refused to agree to the House language. There was general agreement, however, that the Secretary has no authority to establish a statutory Agency.

All references to the "Agency" were eliminated from the legislation and, in that form, it was approved by both Houses and sent to the President.

The resultant confusion appeared to stem entirely from a problem of legal semantics.

Representatives of both Houses of Congress had taken the position that the Secretary of Defense had no authority to establish a "statutory" agency, and that Congressional approval was essential before such action could be taken. This Congressional authority did not materialize, but the Congress did give its approval for the Secretary to "engage in" advanced research, to let contracts through one or more of the military departments, and to utilize Defense Department "employees and consultants" for this purpose.

Subsequently, Chairman Vinson sanctioned the establishment of an "agency," but not a "statutory" agency.

Thor-Jupiter Controversy Still Alive; New Evidence Cited By AF Secretary

The Thor-Jupiter controversy—presumably solved by Secretary of Defense McElroy's December decision to put both missiles into production—still faces a "final review" in the next week or 10 days.

Secretary of the Air Force James H. Douglas made this disclosure in House Armed Services Committee testimony released 13 February.

He said he is "troubled" by the cost of producing both missiles and as assurances increase of having an operational

Thor "the more my concern is increased that we not follow this program on a more expensive course than is necessary."

He said he plans to take new studies to the Secretary of Defense "for a final review" by about 21 February.

Secretary Douglas said as the program progresses, it "tends to produce a desire to limit it to one missile and to save the money that could be saved by producing only one missile and training units for only one missile."

Evidence on which Secretary McElroy based his December decision was compiled prior to more recent successes of the Thor, Secretary Douglas said. He added that the Thor has now completed what he described as "the best guided missile flight of more than 1000 miles that we know anything about anywhere."

Asked if he was satisfied that the Thor would meet all of his requirements and if he could concentrate entirely on the Thor, Secretary Douglas replied: "I believe it will meet all requirements. There is still room for a difference of opinion as to the value that one has insurance-wise by proceeding somewhat further with both missiles."

Secretary Douglas gave the Committee comparative cost figures for the two missiles. The censored testimony shows that (deleted) squadrons of Thors will cost $ (deleted) million more, in round figures, than (deleted) squadrons of Jupiters.

Secretary Douglas also testified that a program to speed development and operational capability of the Titan missile is again being considered by the Defense Department.

Keep SAC Punch "Forever," Hill Told

General Curtis E. LeMay, Vice Chief of Staff of the Air Force, has told a Congressional Committee that the present capability of the Strategic Air Command, which he formerly headed, should be continued "forever."

In testimony released on 13 February by the House Armed Services Committee, General LeMay said: "Manned bombers" will be used "way into the future," although the vehicle "may not look like an airplane and fly in the atmosphere as aircraft do now."

Asked if the bomber would be "a manned satellite," he replied: "That would be as good a description as any."

Although the SAC mission will continue and the types of weapon systems they employ will "certainly change," General LeMay said all studies "indicate for as long as we can see ahead the best attack would be a combination of the unmanned missile and the manned vehicle."

REP. GAVIN PROUD OF THE ARMY

Representative Leon J. Gavin (R-Pa.), second-ranking Republican on the House Armed Services Committee, has told the House of his pride in the Army. He suggested that Congress restore the Army's strength "to at least 900,000 men."

Here is what he said to the House:

"Mr. Speaker, I am proud of the United States Army.

"It was a great victory for the Army and a complete vindication of the position they had taken. It proves in a very definite manner that General Gavin knew what he was talking about.

"If the Army had not been shackled with restrictions, they would have had a satellite in space long before Russia.

"There are certain people who think that ground forces and Army techniques have become obsolete. However, this convincing demonstration should indicate that the Army has the brains, skill, and ingenuity to carry out and reach whatever objectives may be assigned to them.

"They have never failed and if given further flexibility, I feel certain they will solve the problems of the IRBM and the ICBM.

"Also, let me say to the House, immediate consideration should be given to restoring the strength of our ground forces to at least 900,000 men."

THE ARMY H-23D . . .

HELICOPTER WITH TOMORROW BUILT IN

Design of the basic H-23 helicopter was largely governed by a doctrine of ruggedness. It has produced a dependable helicopter, with a record of safety unequalled in its class.

Now, in the H-23D, a completely new 1000-hour+ drive system is introduced, seen as a major break-through in lower operating costs. A full-time 250 horsepower is available and, significantly, without "redline" restrictions warning of jeopardized service life. Thus, ruggedness has also afforded growth potential.

In the H-23D, growth potential assumes a new importance. Its existing components are designed to accept even greater power increases for the future's most challenging performance demands. Now, more than ever, the Army H-23 is an investment in tomorrow.

New Navy Will Have More Submarines, Fewer Planes, Increased ASW Gear

More submarines and fewer aircraft will make up the Navy of the future. This is the picture painted by Admiral Arleigh A. Burke, USN, during recent testimony before the House Armed Services Committee.

He said the Navy will continue to operate about the same number of surface ships as it expects to have at the end of fiscal '59—about 750.

The future fleet, he said, will "include about 150 ships with nuclear power, surface-to-air missiles in about 200 ships, and antisubmarine missiles or antisubmarine aircraft aboard nearly all combatant ships."

Shipping Defense

Admiral Burke said "The largest group of forces will be those required primarily for antisubmarine warfare and for air and missile defense of shipping."

He added that in the 1960-70 era, the Navy will require several striking groups "composed of attack carriers and guided-missile cruisers and frigates. These forces will comprise only about one-tenth of our planned total ships, but their mission will be important, particularly for limited war but useful also in general war."

The CNO said the Navy sees "no substitute in the period 10 to 15 years from now for the long-range missile as the deterrent to all-out war," but, likewise, sees "no substitute at this time for the manned aircraft."

Although the Navy of the future will have "somewhat less aircraft," he told the committee "There is no weapon development presently in sight which will replace the piloted attack aircraft for precise, discriminating delivery of weapons at medium ranges under rapidly changing tactical situations—situations which will continue to exist in limited war. The aircraft carrier weapon system is the essential answer to this problem—a mobile, precision striking force which can get to the scene quickly."

Carriers "Cutting Tool"

Attack aircraft based aboard carriers of the future will be equipped with the latest in thermonuclear missiles, he said. "The striking forces will also have a greatly improved defensive capacity. Each force will have a concentration of surface-to-air missile launchers—comparable to the air defense of a large city, and its fighters will carry air-to-air missiles of 50-mile range or longer." For the period 10 to 15 years from now, he said, the carrier force will be the "primary cutting tool" for limited war.

He also made these predictions about the Navy of the future:

- For 1970, sufficient amphibious ships to land two Marine divisions.

- The Navy's air arm will contain higher performance aircraft in all categories.

- As many as possible of the aircraft assigned to the Marines will be able to take off and land vertically.

- There will be nuclear-powered, fleet ballistic missile submarines.

- Submarines also will be equipped with smaller missiles.

Admiral Burke said it is too early to make predictions about two aspects of the future Navy, although both will be pursued. One is the nuclear-powered seaplane; the other is space vehicles.

UNDERWATER SWITCH—LCDR. John C. Roe (left), relieves Cdr. Francis D. Fane, as Commanding Officer of Underwater Demolition Unit One, Pacific Fleet Amphibious Force, headquarters at Coronado, Calif. Commander Roe reported from Key West, Fla., where he served as Commanding Officer of the Navy's Underwater Swimmers School. This is his second tour with the Navy "frogmen," serving in 1955 as Commanding Officer of Underwater Demolition Team 12. Commander Fane, who has spent ten years in UDT work departs for Japan where he will serve on the Staff of Commander, Military Sea Transportation Service, Western Pacific.

RAdm. Romoser In Command

RAdm William K. Romoser, has taken charge of the Atlantic Fleet's Training Command, Norfolk, Va., relieving Capt. F. V. H. Hilles, Acting Commander for the past month.

The Admiral, formerly Commander of Amphibious Group Four, resides at 813 S. Overlook Dr., Alexandria, Va.

Law Primer Published

The U. S. Naval Institute has published a condensation and explanation of the fundamentals of the Uniform Code of Military Justice for use as a textbook in the U. S. Naval Academy course on the subject.

Entitled "Military Law," the text was written by Capt. J. K. Taussig, USN-Ret., and Cdr. H. B. Sweitzer, USN. It was revised and edited by Cdr. M. E. Wolfe, USN, and Lt. Cdr. R. I. Gulick, USN.

Copies of the 90-page booklet are available for $2 each from the Institute, Annapolis, Md.

Capt. Hooper, A-Expert Gets Destroyer Squadron

Capt. Edwin B. Hooper, Assistant Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance for Research since December 1955, has assumed command of Destroyer Squadron 26.

He has been succeeded by Capt. Edward A. Ruckner, Commander Destroyer Squadron 36 for the past 15 months.

A pioneer in the development of nuclear weapons, Captain Hooper was one of the original members of the U. S. Atomic Energy Commission's Division of Military Application. During a previous tour in BuOrd, from 1950 to 1952, he was Assistant for Nuclear Application in the Research and Development Division. He was instrumental in starting development of a number of A-weapons, including the nuclear depth bomb, "Betty," and the nuclear warhead version of the surface-to-air missile, "Talos."

NAVY TELLS TERM RETENTION COST

Legislation establishing new term retention contracts and increased separation pay for Reserve officers will cost an estimated $18 million for the Navy alone.

The entire cost of the plan has not been disclosed by the Defense Department, but the Navy was asked during recent RIF hearings before the Brooks House Armed Services Subcommittee to provide money figures for the proposal.

RAdm. E. C. Stephan, Navy Chief of Legislative Liaison, has told the subcommittee that "out-of-pocket" costs for Navy personnel will total $18,019,840.

But, he said, relating the estimated cost of the plan to possible savings, the cost of training one pilot and one officer candidate is estimated to be $86,000 and $1,400, respectively. "Thus it would be necessary to retain only 12 pilots or 714 OCS-trained officers to save $1 million."

He said the cost estimates are based on the assumption that the percentage of Regular and Reserve officers in the Navy will remain approximately the same as in fiscal year 1958, and that the current officer strength will not change significantly during the next five years.

MCB Sailors To Wear Identification Marks

Navy men assigned to Mobile Construction Battalions soon will begin sewing on unit identification marks.

Similar to the ship name sleeve mark worn by sailors assigned to Fleet ships, the new device recently was approved for wear by a number of other Navy organizations. It consists of a one-half inch curved strip bearing the individual's unit designation in white block letters.
The marks are worn on the right sleeve of both the blue dress and white jumper uniforms.

The Naval Supply Depots at Norfolk, Va., and Oakland, Calif., are accepting requisitions for the marks from construction battalion commanding officers.

The next group to don the device, the Navy said, will be members of aviation squadrons and men assigned to afloat staffs.

Air Force Opens New Regular Appointments To Reserves; 1 March-31 Application Period

Thousands of Reserve officers will be able to reapply or apply anew for Regular Air Force appointments beginning 1 March.

Probably more than 3500 appointments will be made next Spring as a result of these applications.

The forthcoming appointments will include an annual augmentation program and a "clean-up" of the recent augmentation which saw some 18,000 Reserves named for Regular billets.

Here is the complete text of the Air Force instruction (ALMAJCOM 422/58) on the new appointment program:

SUBJECT: Hq USAF Plan for the Next Regular Officer Augmentation Phase. 1. Message this Headquarters AFPTR-P-3A 113874 dated 26 December 1957 is rescinded.

2. The above referenced message announced the Hq USAF Plan for the Next Regular Officer Augmentation Phase. After transmittal of the message, certain factors developed which necessitated changes to the plan. This message announces the revised plan.

3. This message applies only to those persons who are eligible to apply for appointment under the provisions of AFR 36-5, 13 September 1956.

4. VACANCIES: Exact vacancies cannot be determined until the current program is completed. Total vacancies will depend upon declination and medical disqualification rates of current selectees.

5. The revised plan follows:

a. Application period for all applicants. 1 March 1958 to 31 May 1958.

b. OLD APPLICANTS: Any person who applied for appointment during the application period 15 October 1956 to 14 March 1957 and was not selected, may be reconsidered for appointment by submitting a letter requesting reconsideration.

(1) Letter to be submitted during application period.

(2) Letter to be submitted to immediate commander requesting reconsideration for Regular Air Force appointment and will contain:

(a) Statement of total active Federal commissioned service performed since attaining age 21, computed as of 31 December 1958, will be shown by years, months and days. Example: 9 years 10 months 11 days.

(b) Changes in educational status since submission of last application will be shown. Immediate commander will indorse forward (through channels prescribed by Major Commander) recommending approval or disapproval. If disapproval state reasons why.

c. NEW APPLICANTS: Any person who did not apply during the period 15 October 1956 to 14 March 1957 and is now desirous of being considered for Regular Air Force appointment, may submit a letter requesting consideration for appointment.

(1) Letter to be submitted during application period.

(2) Letter to be submitted to immediate commander requesting consideration for Regular Air Force appointment and will contain:

(a) Educational level completed.

(b) Completed AF Form 1475 will be attached to letter. Total active Federal commissioned service performed since attaining age 21 will be computed as of 31 December 1958.

(c) If required, letter will contain request for waiver of age and/or education.

Immediate commander will indorse forward (through channels prescribed by Major Commander) recommending approval or disapproval. If disapproval state reasons why.

d. ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENTS remain the same as in AFR 36-5, 13 September 1956.

DO-IT-YOURSELF GOLF COURSE READY

The first nine holes of the Mather AFB, Calif., 18-hole golf course will open about 1 April.

The course, which is being constructed with non-appropriated funds, was given a great boost at its inception about a year ago when the Military Affairs Committees of the Sacramento City and County Chambers of Commerce obtained the services of local contractors to assist in getting construction of the course under way.

Actual work is being accomplished on weekends by Mather volunteers—most of them officer and airmen golfers who expect to make full use of the facility.

Additional Names For AF School

The marked a 21 per-cent reduction over the previous record low rate in 1956.

The 1957 record also saw the first completely accident-free month, August, since the formation of MATS in 1948.

Col. J. L. Sullivan Is "Boss Of Year"

The honor of "Outstanding Boss of the Year" has been bestowed upon the Dobbs AFB, Ga., Commander, Col. Joseph L. Sullivan, by one of the most active Jaycee groups in Georgia.

Colonel Sullivan was cited for participation in civic activities, for his abilities as a leader in both military and civic affairs, and for his work as an outstanding Cobb County Executive.

The award in the form of a plaque was presented to Colonel Sullivan at the annual "Young Man of the Year" banquet at which the Jaycee's honor the outstanding citizens in the country. The awards were presented in recognition of service and participation in civic affairs.

The Colonel's Community activities in the past year have included; Chairman of the Armed Services Division, Tri-county Community Chest Drive; Director at Large, Cobb County Chamber of Commerce; member of the Board of Directors, Cobb County TB & Health Association; member of the Aviation Committee, Atlanta Chamber of Commerce; member of the Cobb County Red Cross Advisory Group; member of the St. Joseph's Holy Name Society; a member of the Marietta Rotary Club. ## First AF Reserve Training Reassigned

The Continental Air Command's Fourteenth Air Force will take over supervision of reserve training in 15 Eastern states when the First Air Force, Mitchel AFB, N. Y., is inactivated 30 June.

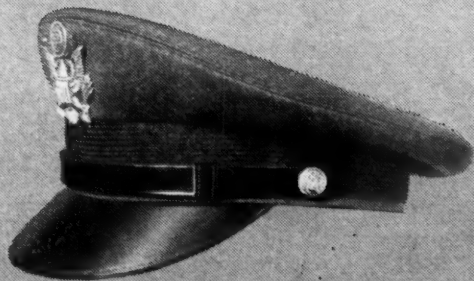

At the same time, the 14th will transfer Reserve supervision in New Mexico, Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and Arkansas to the Tenth Air Force at Selfridge AFB, Mich., in a move designed to "equalize" the Reserve load.

The Fourth Air Force, comprising the Western states, will not be affected.

Bell Telephone Laboratories develops NEW COMPACT COMPUTER FOR U.S. AIR FORCE

Transistorized "Leprechaun" digital computer is high-speed, simple and reliable... a significant advance in computer design

Because of its unusual combination of research skills and communication experience, the Bell System has been called upon to carry on a number of defense activities for the United States government.

An interesting example is a recent project for the Air Force. The Bell Telephone Laboratories was asked to develop a technique for a new, simpler and smaller digital computer for weapons calculations. This was made possible by the Bell Laboratories' invention of the transistor, tiny substitute for the vacuum tube.

To evaluate a new design that was subsequently created, the Laboratories built an unusual model computer. No computer is simple, but this one (affectionately dubbed "Leprechaun" by its designers) is a lot smaller and simpler than most of the behemoths now at work. It has only some 9000 electrical components (5000 of them transistors), all easily connected or disconnected.

One of the requirements of the Air Force was for fast "remembering." "Leprechaun" can tap its 1024 "word" memory instantly, no matter where the information happens to be stored.

Because of its comparative simplicity, a computer like "Leprechaun" should be less expensive to manufacture, and can be operated and maintained by less highly specialized personnel.

It's an example of great strides in simplifying and miniaturizing circuits... a problem of profound interest to Bell Laboratories researchers as they develop radically new equipment for your future telephone service.

The Benefits of Competition. Maj. Gen. John B. Medaris, head of the Army Ballistic Missile Agency, in his appearance on NBC's "Meet the Press" television program 9 February, said what has needed saying for a long time in respect to so-called inter-Service rivalry. He not only denied it is harmful, he insisted it is a powerful influence for progress and that we could use more of it.

Questioned specifically concerning the influence of inter-Service rivalry on the intermediate range missiles Thor, for the Air Force, and Jupiter, for the Army, the General said that the fact that they were independently developed and will be put into production independently means that both the individual missiles and our over-all IRBM program will be in operation considerably sooner than would have been the case without the spur of competition.

Along these same lines, Admiral Arleigh A. Burke, Chief of Naval Operations, has told the House Armed Services Committee that it is "very fortunate" that the Army was in a position to launch a satellite—"it shows what competition, I think, can do." Here, then, is another instance where independent research and development has contributed heavily to the nation's interest.

Too much is being blamed these days on inter-Service rivalry. Competition between the Services, in fact, is a great stimulus to progress and results in much that is good for the national security.

We wish the critics in and out of Congress could witness at first hand the workings of our joint commands operated under the Joint Chiefs of Staff at home and abroad, and the many joint training exercises participated in every year by all four of the Services. There the officers and men from each Service contribute wholeheartedly their utmost cooperation for the good of all. Each has something—special talents, training, tradition—which it has developed over the years. At the operating and fighting level it is all for one—and that one is the defense of the nation.

Designed for Missiles. The Martin Company's experience in designing and building with its own money the new missile plant at Orlando, Fla., is a powerful refutation of former Secretary of Defense Wilson's contention that mammoth aircraft plants could be converted to missile construction as the emphasis on weapons shifted. As reported on the following page of this issue, Martin found the facts to be exactly opposite. Efficiency would be lost and costs increased if plants designed for the fabrication of aircraft were changed over to missile construction.

The Martin Orlando plant, which has the further distinction of being the only aircraft industry plant under Army cognizance, already is contributing to the Navy and Marine Corps through its construction of the hard-punching air-to-ground missile Bullpup, and to the Army and Marines through the Lacrosse field artillery type missile and the intricate Missile Master for use with the Army's Nike, Ajax and Hercules. There are strong indications that Martin, which built for the Air Force the first operational ground-to-ground long-range missile, the Matador and its successor, the Mace, will soon have further Air Force contracts to fulfill at its new Orlando facility, thus making it an all-Service plant.

Reviewing Reviews. The complaints made to the Senate Preparedness Subcommittee by so many representatives of defense industries that the multiplicity of agencies in the Department of Defense makes it exceedingly difficult to get a firm decision has now been echoed in the House

How About Combat NCO's?

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

In looking over your memo column in the 25 January issue, next to the last item, "Too Much Talk About The Cordiner Pay Plan," I notice the only man you take care of besides the electronics technician, is the cook. Granted, that a good cook is probably the greatest single morale factor in any outfit, but please don't overlook the combat non-commissioned leader. When the chips are down he is still going to win the scrap.

MAJOR GENERAL, U. S. ARMY

Pay For Top Ranks

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

Most of us in the Service will agree with you that a good start has been made "toward the correction of the Armed Services' antiquated pay structure." In my judgment, however, the new pay scales still do not recognize the marked increase in responsibility that goes with the achievement of General or flag officer rank.

In round figures the average Colonel will, under the new scales, receive 1000 per month. Using that as a point of departure, I seriously propose the following scales: 0-7-1500; 0-8-2000; 0-9-2500; 0-10-3000; Chief of Staff—3500; Chairman, Joint Chiefs and 5 star officers—4000.

I estimate that these scales for the Army alone would add about 250 thousand dollars per month to the price tag. There are about 100,000 of us in the officer corps. If the money cannot be found otherwise, I suggest that this adjustment can be painlessly funded by reducing the proposed officer increases on an average of 250 per month. Do not charge this against the enlisted rates, thereby providing ammunition to the egalitarians.

Perhaps I am naive but I believe there are a substantial number in our "band of brothers" who genuinely want some real measure of financial recognition to go to our top professional leadership. I submit that the proposed 135.00 per month differential between a Colonel and Brigadier General in the administration's pay bill is not adequate.

"COLONEL, REGULAR ARMY"

Study Law, Says Infantryman

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

Reading that, "Lawyers Shun Career in Armed Forces" in the January 25 issue and about the "desperate picture" drawn by a JAG captain certainly convinced me that such learned and devoted men deserve more pay. Perhaps attorneys now serving in less important positions in the combat arms would then seek JAG positions.

Before increasing pay for an attorney with a bachelor's degree, however, we should improve the lot of other specialists. The mistakes of an accountant could also "cost us millions." (The mistakes of a field commander might some day cost millions, lives, and failure; however, there is no point in worrying about that now.)

Many fine engineers in the Armed Services have masters' degrees and could earn more money elsewhere; Catholic chaplains have the equivalent of a Ph. D. Of course, more legislators have reserve commissions in the JAG than the Chaplains' Corps and so incentive pay for attorneys will be easier to obtain.

About 150 years ago Wellington wrote that the first duty of an officer was, "... to so train the private men under his Command that they may, without question, beat any force opposed to them in the field." And, that his officers would not be debarrated from doing this by paperwork, or, "the futile drivelling of mere quill-driving."

Our Armed Forces still theoretically exist to achieve success in combat; however, paperwork is clearly more important in this modern age. Only an old fashioned and parochial infantryman would still be naive and hypocritical enough to attempt to proselyte our finest youth into leadership positions.

Accelerated promotions, extra pay (to $250 per month), and "credit for the time spent in school earning their professional degrees" have been proposed for JAG officers. These will surely correct the reported "inexperience [that] hurts military justice." Everyone knows that the military justice problem has always been in the division JAG office and not in the units.

Capable young line officers must come to realize that they should spend less time with their units. Rather than wasting their time studying tactics they should go to night school for a few semesters for a law degree.

of the Budget. A decision is made not once but a number of times, they told the House group. A project is justified to the DoD top levels, finally goes to BoB then to Congress, is authorized in bills acted on through the legislative committees; then the whole process is repeated through the appropriations committees to get the actual funds. Then, lo and behold, the operating agency must return to the DoD committees and Assistant Secretaries to get "final" approval for expenditure of the funds already approved and appropriated!

As Admiral Burke told the Committee, "There are a lot of people who can say 'No.' There are very few people who can say 'Yes.'"

All this sums up to the point that what the Department of Defense needs is not more new agencies but a simplification of organization—a shortening of the lines of communication between those who have important things to do and those who can say "Yes."

QUOTES FROM THE JOURNAL

10 Years Ago (14 Feb. 1948)—The strong plea for an increase in service pay voiced by General of the Army Dwight D. Eisenhower in his farewell press conference last Saturday strikes a responsive chord not only in the Army but in the Navy, Air Force and Coast Guard. As General Eisenhower pointed out, today's pay tables are based substantially on those adopted in 1908, and their insufficiency bears heavily on Service personnel in these days of high prices.

50 Years Ago (15 Feb. 1908)—Inasmuch as the War Department has available only $25,000 for the purchase of the three airships it has ordered at an aggregate cost of $46,000, Congress should not hesitate to vote an appropriation to supply the needed funds and provide for the purchase of additional aerial craft in case those already ordered shall prove satisfactory.

90 Years Ago (15 Feb. 1868)—The Papal minister of war is said to have finally adopted the Spencer rifle for the artillery, engineers, chasseurs, gendarmes and transport corps. The zouaves and the legion are to be armed with the Remington rifle.

Nation's Most Modern "Unified" Missile Plant In Action; Its Output Bolsters Forces; Its People Boost Readiness

ORLANDO, FLA.

MISSILES are forging a new kind of relationship between Industry and the Armed Forces to strengthen the Defense Team.

From the drab DEW Line in the frigid Arctic to the colorful and versatile air-conditioned Martin Missile Plant here—largest industrial structure in Florida—Industry is taking on increased operational responsibilities at the request of the Fighting Forces.

Civilians from Industry are manning the DEW Line in the Far North under Air Force supervision. In the United States, Martin Company people are maintaining intricate air defense gear for the Army.

For years, Industry has deployed "Tech Reps" to all parts of the world to aid the Services in keeping battle gear in combat readiness.

Civilians On Duty

Today, it's different. The ubiquitous Tech Reps are being beefed up by the actual participation of civilians from Industry in the utilization and maintenance of weapon systems, such as the Martin Missile Master under construction here.

To get the story of the missile mutations, THE JOURNAL sent a reporter to this $18,500,000 facility, financed entirely by the Martin Company. It will probably do about $70,000,000 in business for all the Services this year.

The speed of the Missile Age is pointed up in the fact that ground was broken here on a 6777 acre site only one year ago today, 15 February 1957. The full shift of production from the main Martin facility at Baltimore, Md., of all work on three major projects has just been completed.

Army Has Cognizance

The Orlando Division is unique in that it is the only privately-owned aircraft industry facility over which the Army has mobilization cognizance.

The Navy has cognizance of the Martin plant in Baltimore, Md., where the all-jet P6M SeaMaster is in production.

The Martin plant at Denver, Colo., where the Titan ICBM is being built, is under Air Force cognizance.

At Orlando, missile weapons for all the Services are being manufactured in a plant that has been expressly designed for production of relatively small type missiles and electronic systems.

In addition to the Missile Master, which the Army is using to control and coordinate the fire of its NIKE Ajax and NIKE Hercules batteries and the Hawk low-altitude air defense missile, the Martin Orlando division produces the 11-foot long, 600 pound Bullpup short-range air-to-surface missile for the Navy and Marine Corps.

Also in production here is the mobile 20-foot long Lacrosse field artillery surface-to-surface guided missile for the Army and Marine Corps, designed to replace heavy artillery in strikes against enemy strong points.

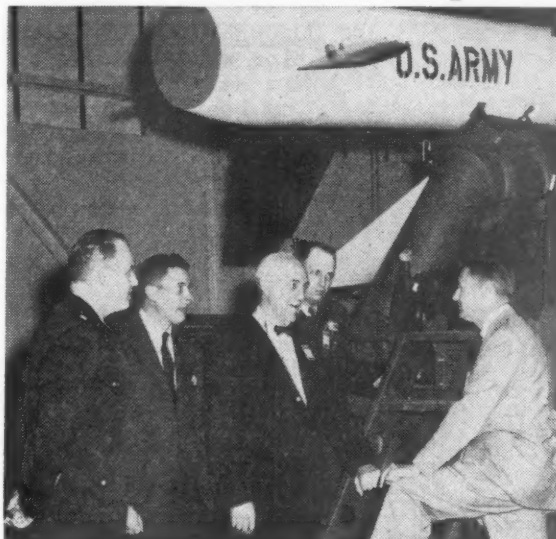

An announcement is expected shortly that the Orlando Division also will be in production for the Air Force.

Versatility Stressed

"Versatility is our long suit," says Orlando Division Vice President Edward G. Uhl. He stresses the need of modern, specialized facilities for missile manufacture in order to avoid "technical constipation" and to achieve economies, not possible in outdated aircraft manufacturing plants.

Emphasizing the flexibility of the new plant, Mr. Uhl and his associates showed a visitor how the expandable manufacturing area can be rearranged in quick fashion to accelerate production of any present weapon or to move to new missiles and electronic systems.

With equal pride, Martin Company officials here are quick to show off the functional alignment of modern management offices, a veritable display of industrial technicolor. Each executive has been allowed by forward-looking

Vice President Uhl to choose his own color scheme.

But the story of the Orlando Division doesn't end with the manufacturing activities in the heart of the orange belt.

What is particularly gratifying to the hundreds of employees here is the side-by-side role the Martin people have been asked to play in the training for and even the actual utilization of the armament they are building.

Lacrosse Readiness Effort

Take the story of the Lacrosse.

Sketching on a sheet of yellow drafting paper an operations time table as explicit as any G-3 might devise, Mr. F. G. Foster, Project Manager for Lacrosse Weapon Systems Support, told how Martin men are helping the Army to make certain the missile is used and maintained with maximum effectiveness from the day it goes into action with units in the field.

The first phase of a month's-long program last year saw Mr. Foster and his aides conducting Staff Orientations for 140 Army people from 24 agencies, brought in four groups to the Martin Headquarters in Baltimore. The Orlando facility was not yet completed.

This spadework accomplished, the next step was to conduct a Key Personnel Course for future instructors at the Ordnance Guided Missile School, Redstone Arsenal, Ala., and at the Artillery and Missile School, Ft. Sill, Okla.

Martin instructors were sent to these schools to conduct a nine months' pro-

ARMY COGNIZANCE

Army representatives, headed by Assistant Secretary Frank W. Higgins, inspect a Lacrosse missile on a tour of The Martin Company's new guided missile and electronics plant at Orlando, Fla., which is under Army cognizance.

gram of training for key officers and enlisted personnel.

Phase II included five guidance courses of 12 weeks each, four electronic-mechanical courses of five weeks each, and five operator courses of five weeks each.

The instruction at this point was featured by the early availability of preliminary handbooks, later to be the basis for official technical manuals, and by the availability also of spare parts and weapon system hardware.

Phase III of the Lacrosse project has seen preparation for Resident Training at Redstone, which has the maintenance mission for the Lacrosse. Capt. Sherman Bunn is Project Officer for Lacrosse Training at the Guided Missile School, whose Commandant is Col. Henry S. Newhall.

To assist Colonel Newhall and Captain Bunn, Martin is providing four instructors. The bulk of the instructors, however, will be Army men who completed the Key Personnel Course (Phase II), conducted by the Martin Company.

Phase IV at Ft. Sill will parallel the training that starts next month at Redstone. At Sill, Maj. Arthur Corley is getting set, with the assistance of Martin Orlando instructors, to initiate in July a full-scale Lacrosse training program for operators.

Army-Marine Briefing

Meantime, an Orlando Orientation Team has visited 10 key Army and Marine Corps installations to brief officers and noncommissioned officers on the Lacrosse. These include the Signal Center at Ft. Monmouth, N. J., the Ordnance Corps' Aberdeen, Md., Proving Ground; Ft. Benning, Ga., Infantry Center; Marine Corps Schools, Quantico, Va.; Ft. Knox, Ky., Armor Center; Second Army Headquarters, Ft. Meade, Md.; Ft. Belvoir, Va., Engineer Center; Sixth Army Headquarters at the Presidio of San Francisco; and the Marine Corps Bases at 29 Palms, Calif., and Camp Pendleton, Calif.

The Orientation Team gives a two-hour presentation, which is followed by a question-answer period.

"We feel certain that when Lacrosse is deployed to operating units, not only the direct users but hundreds of others will know this weapon intimately," says Project Manager Foster.

More than 3900 people, he reports, already have participated in the orientation briefings, and others are being scheduled for this Spring.

Throughout this time, Martin Company liaison men have been in close touch with officers at General Willard G. Wyman's Continental Army Command Headquarters at Ft. Monroe, Va., assisting in such matters as TO&E's, training manuals, MOS's, etc.

"The basic objective," explains Mr. Foster, "is to make certain that all training for operation and maintenance of the Lacrosse is geared exactly to the time the Army wants the Lacrosse available for combat missions."

STRESS ON R&D

ORLANDO, FLA.

There's sharp emphasis on Research and Development at the Martin Orlando Division.

More than 100 engineers are assigned to Advanced Design activities.

This is about one out of every five engineers here.

Missile Master Similar

The close cooperation between the Orlando Division and the Army in the Lacrosse effort is evident also in the Missile Master program.

Missile Master Manager Joe Blickman recounts how last Fall a Staff Orientation Course was given four times, from two to three and a half days each, at Ft. Meade, Md., site of the first Missile Master installation.

Between 180 and 200 officers from the six Antiaircraft Artillery Regions, 21 Army Headquarters, Continental Army Command, the Signal Corps and the Air Defense Center at Ft. Bliss, Tex., attended these indoctrination sessions.

Martin Has Maintenance Mission

The Army, in an effort to conserve manpower, decided that it would be most economical and efficient if the Orlando Division of the Martin Company—at least at the outset—assumed full maintenance responsibilities for the Missile Master system.

Missile Master operators are being trained by Martin experts on specially designed equipment at the Orlando airport, nearby the new plant here.

Mr. Blickman says the current schedule permits the training of about 90 Army people a month, the number of military personnel needed to man a Missile Master site seven days a week around the clock.

Were there any special problems in the development of the training program? Mr. Blickman was asked.

"Yes," he replied, "there were of course a number of problems in getting the training program under way."

One of them, he confided, was of a particularly sensitive nature.

It seems that initially the Army did not count on the utilization of WAC soldiers to help operate the system. While the Army studied this woman-power utilization problem, it became necessary for the contractor of the training site to proceed with construction in order to meet a tight deadline.

The result: there's an admitted potential shortage of appropriate rest-room accommodations—seemingly the only shortcoming of this versatile and ultra-modern missile complex that the Martin Company planned and built, for which the Army has cognizance, and whose products will be used by all four Services.

MATADOR MUSCLE

The addition of the Martin Matador guided missile to the Pacific Air Forces, with deployment of a squadron to Taiwan, has "increased geometrically" deterrent strength of U. S. forces, according to General Laurence S. Kuter, USAF.

General Kuter, who heads Air Force units in the Pacific, told a conference of 28 generals and more than 40 colonels at Hickham AFB, Hawaii, on 3 February:

"The placement of the 17th Tactical Missile Squadron on Taiwan with their operationally proven missile TM-61 Matador is a welcome addition to our atomic capability force of F-100 Super Sabre fighter bombers presently operating in the Far East.

"With them we have gotten into the missile business," he said of the Matador, "and our deterrent strength has increased geometrically."

"MAGIC BRAIN"

AC Spark Plug Division has announced that its "magic brain" guidance system successfully directed an Air Force "Mace" missile on a 650-mile flight from New Mexico to Utah.

The missile, built by the Martin Company, was launched from the Air Force Missile Development Center, Alamogordo, N. Mex., 6 February. It flew to Wendover AFB, Utah.

Air Force officials who witnessed the flight described it as "very successful."

The flight was the first time the missile had used a self-contained, completely automatic system developed and produced by AC Spark Plug Division at its plant in Milwaukee. No ground controls are used in the AC guidance device, known as the Achiever.

The "Mace" TM-76 missile is similar to the Matador (TM-61) except for the new guidance system. The Matador has used an electronic guidance system controlled from the ground.

AC Spark Plug also is building guidance systems for the Air Force Thor and the Navy Regulus.

NAVY LEADERS APPEAR UNCERTAIN about their future space role. At one point in testimony released by the House Armed Services Committee, Admiral Burke said the Navy will continue to pursue the subject of "space vehicles." The CNO said the Navy "has a need for earth satellites for a variety of purposes." Later, in the same testimony, he agreed with a Committee member that he doesn't think the Navy needs to look to the "control of space" as do the Army and Air Force. He said, "we have some special things that we are sure can be incorporated in satellites which we would like to have incorporated in satellites, but we don't care about launching them ourselves." Still later, he said "all Services have a strategic requirement for space vehicles of various types."

ADMIRAL ARTHUR RADFORD, USN-Ret., former JCS Chairman, has been tabbed by Army Secretary Brucker as the person who was responsible for advising former SecDef Wilson to impose a 200 mile limit on Army missiles. Mr. Wilson took such action in November 1956 in an official statement on roles and missions. Pressed to reveal who was behind the controversial order, Army Secretary Brucker has told the House Armed Services Committee he "got the impression" that it was Admiral Radford.

SECRETARY McELROY HAS STATED that the Army is being granted authority to use missiles at a greater range than 200 miles, but Mr. Brucker makes the point that the document which declares the 200 mile ban has not been amended officially.

SECRETARY BRUCKER'S POLITICAL ACUMEN—he is a former Governor of Michigan—has made him probably the most successful Service Secretary on Capitol Hill. Of course, he has had a powerful assist from the Explorer Satellite.

THE POLARIS MISSILE has been raised to top national priority, placing it in the same category with the Army Jupiter and the Air Force Thor and Atlas. The action, taken by the National Security Council late in January, was revealed by the Navy in Congressional testimony released on 11 February. Testimony also brought out the fact that the Air Force Titan ICBM does not yet have top national priority.

INTER-SERVICE UNDERSTANDING will be enhanced by the action of the Air Force Association in scheduling talks by Maj. Gen. J. P. Daley of the Army and RADM. W. F. Raborn of the Navy during the third annual Jet Age Conference in Washington, D. C. 26-28 February. They will discuss the Jupiter and Polaris projects. The Army-Navy presentations are certain to be a highlight of the Air Force Association sessions.

THE ARMY WILL BE WATCHING to see whether retiring Lt. Gen. James M. Gavin is given full retirement honors—most importantly whether he is decorated with the Distinguished Service Medal—when he leaves active duty next month. His relative "lame duck" status tends to put in the background the fact that as Chief of Research and Development, General Gavin pushed as vigorously as possible the Army's capability to launch the Explorer and its successors. Though there are those in the Army who may question some of the statements made by the General, or attributed to him, during recent weeks, all will agree that he deserves high recognition for his brilliant achievements.

NO CONGRESSIONAL TESTIMONY on military pay legislation will be more critical than that of Mr. Ralph J. Cordiner. The Services are counting heavily on the energetic and dedicated General Electric Company President to lead the presentations against any plan that would sabotage the "pay for merit" approach in favor of a straight across-the-board increase.

IN MOST CASES, once a civilian committee chairman has submitted a report he is willing to let others fight for its implementation. It's an entirely different story, however, with Chairman Cordiner. He is convinced that a modern compensation system is vital to national security. He has spent long hours rallying support and following closely all developments on the pay front. Close associates say that Mr. Cordiner recognizes the fact that some changes may have to be made on Capitol Hill, but he will not compromise the unequivocal recommendation of his Committee that a new kind of approach is needed and that an across-the-board increase won't answer the problem.

AIR FORCE BANDSMEN currently are involved in a "dispersal" program of their own. More than a score of bands are being eliminated. In their place, a smaller number of beefed-up bands are being used to cover the needs of at least two bases each. The new organizations, with 50 men each, will be able to split and play two engagements simultaneously.

A DOCTORATE IN SPACE PHYSIOLOGY has been awarded Capt. Grover J. D. Schack of the Air Force Missile Development Center at Holleman AFB, N. M. He received the degree from the University of Illinois. His thesis was on weightlessness and zero gravity.

NAVY CORRESPONDENCE STUDIES show that 3 out of 10 letters must be rewritten. That comes to 30,000,000 rewrites per year. Navy officials suggest that use of pen and ink corrections, which might save rewriting 10,000,000 letters, could save as much as $10,000,000 annually.

IT NOW APPEARS PROBABLE that protests on Capitol Hill will be much stronger about cutbacks in the Reserve Forces program than in reduction of Army divisions, Navy ships and Air Force wings. One reason is that Service Chiefs cannot present the forceful arguments of such groups as the National Guard Association and Reserve Officers Association. Former SecDef Wilson spoke frequently of a probable trimming of the Reserve Forces as a parallel action to streamlining the Active Forces. But it seems that the Active Establishment has been chosen to take the brunt of the manpower economy axe.

CONFLICTING VIEWS on the Navy's RIF program have shown up in House Armed Services Committee testimony. VADM. James L. Holloway told the Brooks Subcommittee that the release of Naval Reserve officers was "directed" by higher authority, including RIFs still to be made this year and next. Secretary Gates told the full Committee that the fiscal '59 cuts were "not really" directed, that the Navy "of its own choice felt that it could reduce its personnel and wanted to do this to streamline its organization." He said "We would have done this voluntarily at the time in order to put more chips on advanced weapons."

THE NAVY NEEDS more applications from officers for submarine training. It's a result of the stepped-up atomic submarine program.

UNIFORM MATCHING

The Army has issued a new precaution on shade matching in the sale of uniform items.

Circular 700-31 notes that differences in shade for "separates" of the Army green are magnified when racks of clothing are displayed under weak artificial lighting.

The circular tells how this problem can be solved. It says that if it is not possible to utilize natural daylight, artificial light of about 150 foot candle intensity should be utilized. This may be obtained by installing a 500 watt lamp about 36 inches directly above a table.

Permanent Ranks For EM

Prior to the reestablishment of Regular Army enlisted promotions on 1 July, the Army has called for a new look at grade and date of rank entries on enlisted personnel records.

"In order to eliminate errors resulting from incorrect records and dates of rank," says Cir. 640-2, "custodians of personnel records will examine these records and verify permanent grade entries." So far as practicable, the circular says, this verification will be completed by 1 May 1958.

Eligibility requirements and governing procedures for the permanent ratings are scheduled to be issued in forthcoming changes to AR 624-200.

U. S. COAST GUARD

Secretary of the Treasury—Robert B. Anderson
Commandant—Vice Adm. Alfred C. Richmond

RADM-DESIGNEE Richard M. Ross, Assistant Chief, Office of Operations at Coast Guard Headquarters, will be promoted 1 May to succeed RADM. Allen Winbeck as Chief, Office of Personnel.

Admiral Winbeck shifts to duty as Commander 13th Coast Guard District, with Headquarters in Seattle, Wash., relieving RADM. Ira E. Eskridge. Admiral Eskridge reports to Headquarters in Washington, D. C., as Chief, Office of Operations.

Challenges Reserve Cuts

Representative Charles E. Chamberlain (R-Mich.) has charged the Treasury Department with circumventing the intent of Congress by ordering a cutback of expenditures in the Coast Guard Reserve program.

The Michigan legislator said: "Violating what appeared to me to be the clear intent of Congress, the Treasury Department reduced the $15 million appropriation of the Coast Guard Reserve for the current Fiscal Year through a forced saving of $3½ million."

"Next the Treasury ordered that no agency could request more money for Fiscal 1959 than it had been permitted to spend in Fiscal 1958. The Coast Guard, trying desperately to meet the 1960 ready-for-mobilization date of all the other Services, reportedly had planned to ask for more than $15 million in 1959. Under this Treasury order, however, it can request only $11½ million."

"In simplest terms, this means that the Coast Guard will not meet its mobilization goal until 1964 or later. It means that the planned, phased buildup outlined in last year's budget, for which we appropriated sufficient funds, has been abandoned. Already, the program for enlisting additional Reservists and establishing new Reserve units has been severely impaired."

Mr. Chamberlain said he could not believe that this is the time for cutbacks in any field related to national security.

"I cannot believe," he said, "that the decision as to the size and purpose of the Coast Guard should be made by the Treasury Department, after such a policy decision has, in fact, been made by the Congress."

Urging restoration of the funds by the Secretary of the Treasury, he said that unless favorable action was taken, the situation should be reviewed by House to see if the intent of Congress is being thwarted.

Navy Praises Army Satellite Success, But Hits Expense, Inefficiency Of Operation

The Navy has praised the Army for "a magnificent job" in launching a U. S. earth satellite, but contended that the Army system is much more expensive and less efficient than the Navy Vanguard effort.

Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Air, Garrison Norton, said he has no current "first hand" knowledge of the cost of the Jupiter-C, which launched the Army satellite, but declared the "use of the Jupiter-C or the use of any of our other missile hardware for the purpose of putting up small satellites is probably a very, very expensive and rather inefficient way of putting up small satellites."

In testimony released by the House Armed Services Committee on 7 February, he said the use of any large-scale missile hardware to launch satellites "is a costly operation compared to Vanguard."

Admiral Arleigh A. Burke, Chief of Naval Operations, praised the Army satellite success. He said the Army has "done a magnificent job. I think it is very fortunate that the Army was in a position to launch a satellite. It shows what competition, I think, can do. And they are good. They deserve a great deal of credit."

The CNO subsequently told the Committee, however, that the establishment of the feasibility of creating earth satellites is the "direct result" of studies started by the Navy in 1942, "first in recommending a satellite project, and second in establishing the first satellite program."

Secretary Norton told the Committee that although the Army Explorer weighs about 30 pounds, the scientific portion of the satellite weighs only 17 pounds. The Vanguard satellite, he said, will weigh about 72 pounds, including the last stage rocket case, and when this case is disengaged from the satellite, the scientific section will total 21½ pounds.

LEAVENWORTH "PREP"

More than 125 officers have enrolled in the new "Leavenworth Prep Course" offered by the Army Command and General Staff College.

Consisting of several correspondence subcourses, the course may be taken by any qualified officer, regardless of where he is stationed. It is designed for officers of all components who anticipate attending either the regular or associate courses.

It is estimated that an Officer can complete the course in about 10 months by spending three to four hours a week on the work.

The College has invited any officer-Reserve, National Guard or Regular—who is planning or hoping to attend Leavenworth, to address inquiries about the course to the Department of Nonresident Instruction, Army Command and General Staff College, Ft. Leavenworth, Kans.

Reserve Contract Plan Faces Changes

From first page—

Neil H. McElroy, Secretary McElroy requested the legislation as a result of Cordiner Committee recommendations.

Ask New Force-Out Pay

The proposal, as submitted by the Defense Department, would provide contracts only for "selected" Reservists. In addition, it proposes new "force-out" pay rates—two months' pay for each year of contract service—which would go only to those receiving contracts.

Although the full cost of the measure has not been made known, it has been estimated that the plan will cost the Navy about $18 million. This could mean that the total cost of the proposal for all of the Armed Forces could be $75 million or more.

This unofficial estimate would be expected to mount if the Congress decided to write in a mandatory contract provision.

As in the case of the Cordiner pay recommendations, however, the Services are expected to show how the plan ultimately would result in savings by assuring the retention on active duty of officers in whom the Government has invested millions of training dollars.

Higher Pay For Contracts Only

The Pentagon plan asks authority to give contracts to "selected" Reserve officers for periods of two years or longer, and to provide higher readjustment payments for contract service.

Thus, a Reserve officer with 10 years' active service who is given a two-year contract and then RIF'd would receive the current force-out-pay rate for 10 years' service (¼ months' pay for each year), and two months' pay for each of his two contract years.

The same officer, if given a five-year contract, but RIF'd before the contract expires, would receive the higher force-out-pay only for the number of years of contract service which he had completed at the time of the RIF.

Objections have been raised to this feature of the bill, and the Brooks committee may require the Pentagon to pay the higher readjustment pay for the full period of the contract if the contract is broken.

Staff studies also have explored the possibility of writing a mandatory provision into the bill which would require the Services to give contracts to all active duty Reserve officers or else release them from duty.

These questions will be explored during the committee hearings which get underway next week and developments will be fully reported in THE JOURNAL.

ICBM Squadrons Set

Two ICBM squadrons will be activated at SAC's Cooke AFB, Lompoc, Calif., on 1 April and will be assigned to the 1st Missile Division.

The 576th Strategic Missile Squadron will be SAC's first operational ICBM squadron and the 393d Missile Training Squadron (ICBM) will serve as the training organization.

The 567th will be deployed to Francis E. Warren AFB, Cheyenne, Wyo., after completion of training.

The Air Force did not name the commanding officers.

Troublesome Sea Wolf Gets Water-Cooled Reactor; Navy Asks For 20 New Vessels

USS Sea Wolf, second of the Navy's atomic-powered submarines, will be converted to a water-cooled reactor.

This was disclosed by Navy witnesses in testimony released by the House Armed Services Subcommittee on 7 Feb.

The Navy said it is making a bid for 20 new ships and eight conversions (including the Sea Wolf) in the fiscal '59 shipbuilding program.

The Sea Wolf is now equipped with a sodium-cooled reactor which has created numerous problems in the ship's operation. This will be replaced by a water-cooled reactor like that installed in the Nautilus.

President Signs Laws To Speed Military Research, Development And Construction

The President has signed legislation appropriating $1.26 billion in supplemental funds for the Armed Forces.

He also signed an accompanying law which authorizes the use of about $549 million of the amount to speed Air Force construction.

In addition to the new money, the appropriations measure gives the Secretary of Defense authority to transfer $150 million from unused funds to other uses. Of this amount, $100 million will be placed in an "emergency fund" to be available for "unforeseeable and promising research and development," $10 million is set aside for use by the new Advanced Research Projects Agency, and $40 million goes into development of the Army's new Pershing missile and to accelerate procurement and production of the second general divisional and corps-type missiles: LaCrosse, Little John and Sergeant.

All of the new money, $1.26 billion, goes to the Air Force and Navy, as follows: SAC dispersal and alert program—$218.6 million.

Ballistic-missile detection system—$329 million.

Acceleration of Atlas, Thor and Jupiter missiles—$333.4 million.

Acceleration of Polaris and ballistic missile submarines—$350 million.

Construction of additional SAGE facilities—$29 million.

The construction program involves eight SAGE and 29 SAC bases (THE JOURNAL, 18 January, page 8).

RAT Torpedo Rocket-Fired; Parachutes Into Water; "Hunts" Enemy Submarines

The Navy has revealed that a revolutionary torpedo, known as "RAT," is operational with the Atlantic and Pacific Fleets.

"RAT," a nickname for "rocket assisted torpedo."

Use of the "RAT" will permit Navy destroyers to "kill" an enemy submarine without the necessity of going within range of its torpedoes. The Navy said the "kill" radius around destroyers has been extended many square miles.

The "RAT" system is 16 feet long and weighs about 450 pounds.

The "RAT" In Action

It is launched from a short track on a 5-inch gun after being automatically aimed by an electronic computer linked to the Navy's standard sonar submarine detecting gear. The "RAT" is boosted into the air by a solid-fuel rocket motor. As it nears its maximum height, an aluminum casing opens like a clam-shell and the 8-foot long torpedo is released.

On its downward arc, the torpedo is slowed-down by two six-foot parachutes that drop it into the water at a speed calculated to prevent damage to its delicate "homing" mechanism.

Once in the water, the torpedo's secret homing gear guides it to the target despite attempts by the enemy to evade.

The Navy concedes that it does not score a hit every time it is launched, but said that "RAT" has a good hit score.

"RAT" could be armed with an atomic warhead.

The new torpedo was designed at Ordnance Test Station, China Lake, Calif.

The Navy said "RAT" is inexpensive and logistically foolproof.

The launcher was produced at the Puget Sound Naval Shipyard, Bremerton, Wash.; the rocket by Allegany Ballistics Laboratory, Cumberland, Md.; the torpedo by Clevite Research Center, Cleveland, Ohio; and the fire control system by Librascope, Inc., Glendale, Calif.

Bull Goose Makes Successful Flights

The Bull Goose missile has made "many successful test firings," it has been announced jointly by the Air Force and the Fairchild Engine and Airplane Corporation, Hagerstown, Md.

Slated for SAC, the Bull Goose has completed a number of test firings at Cape Canaveral, Fla.

It is an air breathing vehicle capable of serving a variety of missions.

The Bull Goose is described as prominent among several of the missile and pilotless plane projects now undergoing design evaluation, experimental development and test by Fairchild.

The Fairchild Aircraft Division at Hagerstown has prime contract responsibility for the Goose Weapons System. Its powerplant is being developed and produced by Fairchild's Engine Division at Deer Park, L. I., New York; and its guidance system is the product of Fairchild's Guided Missiles Division, Wyandanch, L. I., N. Y.

"SERIOUS TROUBLE"

Admiral Arleigh A. Burke, Chief of Naval Operations, told the House Armed Services Committee the Navy will be in "serious trouble" in the early 1960's "unless we can get more ships or unless we can find some way of extending the life of our ships."

The latter course has not proved very fruitful, so far, he said.

Admiral Burke told the Committee "we need to just about double the production rate of antisubmarine warfare types of ships" including attack submarines, frigates and destroyer types.

Representative James E. Van Zandt (R-Pa.), a senior member of the Committee, said when the Defense Department appropriations bill comes up for debate on the House floor it may be necessary to offer an amendment to provide for more attack submarines.

New Jet Trainer Begins Navy Tests

The first demonstration flights of the Navy's North American T2J all-purpose jet trainer took place 10 February at Columbus, Ohio.

Further flights of the T2J will begin shortly at Palmdale, Calif., and will continue for about two months. They will include the Navy's preliminary evaluation of the craft.

Designed and produced by North American's Columbus Division for the Naval Air Training Command, Pensacola, Fla., it will be used in primary flight through advanced training programs.

Powered with a Westinghouse J34-WE-36 jet engine developing 3,400 pounds thrust, the tandem seat trainer has a service ceiling of over 40,000 feet and a range of 840 nautical miles. Its top speed is about 500 miles per hour (429 knots) while its landing speed is only 67 knots.

Marines Thwarted In Vehicle Purchase

enough to be delivered to combat troops by helicopter. It weighs 3,940 pounds. The standard American ¾-ton truck, on the other hand, weighs 5,917 pounds and can't be hauled by copter.

Fuel Savings Told

Another advantage of the UNIMOG over the ¾-ton, or six-by-six, truck is the savings which would accrue in fuel consumption. The UNIMOG makes 23 miles to a gallon, while the ¾-ton burns one gallon every nine miles.

The Marine Corps, in its streamlining program, already has adopted two lightweight vehicles, the "Mighty Mite" and the "Mechanical Mule." The "Mighty Mite," a 1,770 pound vehicle is used for reconnaissance, liaison and as a weapons carrier. The "Mechanical Mule," weighing about 800 pounds, is a logistics carrier for front-line troops. It moves at the speed of a man walking and can haul loads of ammunition and rations weighing up to 1,500 pounds.

The addition of UNIMOG to the Corps lightweight motor fleet would vastly improve the capability of rapid movement of troops, the Marine Corps continues.

UNIMOG, now in use by German troops and command units, according to Mercedes-Benz engineers "offers in a single mobile tractor unit a source of power never before known in America." It can carry 10 to 12 combat-equipped troops or pull loads up to 30 times its own weight. It operates over all types of terrain.

With UNIMOG attachments, already developed by its manufacturers, General Shaw said, the Corps would be able to

GENERAL BARTH DECORATED—Lt. Gen. William H. Arnold (right), Commanding General of the Fifth U. S. Army, awards the Distinguished Service Medal to Maj. Gen. George B. Barth, USA-Ret., in a ceremony held recently at Ft. Leavenworth, Kans. General Barth, who retired 31 December 1957, after more than 39 years of active duty in the Army, was awarded the medal for "exceptionally meritorious service to the Government in a succession of high positions of great responsibility." He had served as Commanding General of the 5th Infantry Division from December 1952 to July 1953; as Chief of the Joint United States Military Aid Group, Greece, from November 1953 to November 1955; and as Deputy Commanding General of the First U. S. Army from November 1955 to November 1957.

RCA Defense Manager Made Vice President

John M. Hertzberg has been elected Vice-President Defense Marketing of Radio Corporation of America Defense Electronic Products, which he has managed since July 1957.

A WW II Air Force veteran, Mr. Hertzberg joined RCA in 1945 as a senior engineer. Within two years he became Aviation Marketing Manager. In 1951 he became Manager of Government Contracts and in 1956, Manager of the Airborne Systems Department, Defense Electronics Products.

Other RCA Vice Presidents elected at the same time were: Dr. James Hillier, Vice President of RCA Laboratories; and Raymond W. Saxon, Vice President and General Manager, Victor Radio and "Victrola" Division.

RCA Gets Contract For Early Warning

The Air Force will award the Radio Corporation of America a contract for the systems management and the implementation of a Ballistic Missile Early Warning System.

The Western Electric Company, Inc., General Electric, and Sylvania Electric Products Inc. also will participate in this program.

RCA will be responsible for the system management of the early warning system and will utilize the sub-contractors for other components of the system.

The over-all program will be managed by the Air Force Ballistic Missile Division in Los Angeles, which is responsible for the development of the Thor, Atlas and Titan ballistic missiles.

The Ballistic Missile Early Warning System will use existing communications to the maximum, including the DEW line in Canada and Alaska.

It will operate in conjunction with the SAGE system.

The system will be designed to detect enemy missiles at maximum distance from the North American continent and to provide early warning for North American Air Defense Command, the Strategic Air Command and Civil Defense Agencies, an official Pentagon announcement said.

SYLVANIA ELECTRIC PRODUCTS, INC., has revealed that it will be responsible for the multi-million-dollar data processing phase of the warning system.

Don G. Mitchell, Chairman and President of Sylvania, said: "This is the third major contract award to Sylvania in the field of missile defense. The Company also is the weapons systems manager for the Army Ordnance Corps on the PLATO anti-missile missile system, for use by field armies, and is producing the "electronic shield" which is the automatic defense system of the Air Force B-58 Hustler supersonic bomber. All three projects are the responsibility of Sylvania Electronic Systems, a major division of the company.

NORAD Takes Control Of Arctic DEW Line

The North American Air Defense Command, Colorado Springs, Colo., assumed operational control of the 3,000-mile Distant Early Warning Line on 15 February from the Alaskan Air Command and the 64th Air Division in Newfoundland.

The DEW Line Arctic radar fence represents the final link in the 15,000-mile warning loop around the North American continent. It is designed to warn General Earle E. Partridge, NORAD Commander-in-Chief, of any large-scale bomber attack across the north polar regions.

Operation and maintenance of the DEW Line is performed by the International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation's Service division, the Federal Electric Corporation. The corporation's arctic services are supervised by a detachment of Air Force officers and airmen at Paramus, N. J.

Administration, logistical and maintenance functions for the DEW Line are under the direct supervision of Maj. Gen. T. Alan Bennett, Deputy Chief of Staff for Materiel of the Air Defense Command, who is visiting many of the DEW Line sites this week.

DUKE OFFERS RETIRED OPPORTUNITY

Duke University announces that retired officers can help alleviate the serious shortage of teachers of mathematics by preparing themselves to teach mathematics and accepting teaching positions. With the cooperative support of the National Science Foundation, Duke has developed a special program whereby retired officers can become qualified to teach mathematics in the high schools and elementary mathematics in the colleges.

Providing a review in mathematics, specially designed courses in mathematics and education, and teaching experience, this program extends through approximately one year beginning 21 July 1958. The applicant should hold a bachelor degree and should have completed mathematics through calculus.

Application forms and information can be secured by writing to the Dean of the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences, Duke University, Durham, North Carolina. Completed application forms must be filed not later than 1 April 1958. Selection of participants will be completed by 1 May.

Armed Forces Association Will Increase Benefits

More than 22,000 members of the Armed Forces Relief and Benefit Association, with offices in Washington, D. C. will receive $2,000 increases to the benefits that they receive, with no increase in the insurance contribution.

Effective 1 February 1958, total coverage for each insured member amounts to $12,000 group life insurance.

The $2,000 additional life insurance will be paid to the beneficiary in a single sum as an emergency fund, via telegraph or cable as soon as the Association receives information of the demise of a member. The need for considerable funds is unusually acute at such times for families and by this special service the Association is able to place funds in the hands of the beneficiary at the earliest possible time, Association officials said.

Rear Admiral John B. Lyon, USN—Retired, Secretary-Treasurer of the Association, also announced that an annual refund to members has been declared for the 11th consecutive year. This refund for 1957, payable to all members paying their monthly contribution through 31 January 1958, the end of the Association's fiscal year, has been increased to $5.50 per member month.

This is a 50 cent increase per month over the 1956 refund, and represents a return of approximately 60% on the basic $9.00 contribution per month for $10,000 (now $12,000) group life insurance.

22,000 Refund Checks

Admiral Lyon stated that almost 22,000 refund checks will be mailed during June.

Of particular interest to members who intend to take college courses at their own expense, is the announcement of a new loan program to assist such members in the financing of their studies.

Admiral Lyon said that official notices of these increased benefits will be mailed to individual members as soon as printing permits, about 15 February.

The Association now offers as its benefits $12,000 group life insurance, loans for certain emergency purposes, scholarship grants for college and educational loans for members who are continuing their education at their own expense.

No promise for tomorrow, it is available today.

Regulus II is the big brother of Regulus I, the Navy missile with a 3-year hitch. A Fleet veteran, Regulus I has proved its uncanny accuracy and remarkable reliability in more than 650 launchings.

These are America's ready-to-go missiles...engineering triumphs that mean accurate, deliverable power for your Nuclear Navy. They are being produced by Chance Vought—pioneer U. S. missile-maker with an unequaled backlog of working knowledge in the development of surface-to-surface missile systems.

Navy Chiefs Continue Attack On Pentagon Assistants, Comptroller, Budget Bureau

Top Navy leaders have placed new blame on the Pentagon Comptroller, the Assistant Secretaries of Defense and the Budget Bureau for slowing-down military programs.

Secretary of the Navy Thomas S. Gates charged earlier (THE JOURNAL, 8 February) that the Assistant Secretaries, DoD committees and the Budget Bureau are responsible for delays and "disorder" in Pentagon decision-making.

His attack was followed by criticism from Admiral Arleigh A. Burke, Chief of Naval Operations, and Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Air Garrison Norton.

In testimony released by the House Armed Services Committee on 7 February Admiral Burke and Assistant Secretary Norton outlined some of the "trouble" spots which have created "tremendous difficulties."

Admiral Burke said a "whole series of little decisions" which "cause trouble" occur at the Assistant Secretary of Defense level, and result in "a gradual slowing down of the processes in the Department."

Few Can Say "Yes"

The reason, he said, is that programs must be justified again within the Defense Department after they already have been approved by the Congress. Each program, he said, "is presented to the Department. It is presented to the Congress. It is all approved. Money is appropriated for it. And then we go back and justify it again."

The CNO said "There are a lot of people who can say 'No.' There are very, very few people who can say 'Yes' and make it stick."

He said he agrees with Secretary Gates that the Services should not be required to offer "second proof" to the Comptroller and the Director of the Budget to get money for programs which already have been through the Pentagon, Budget Bureau and Congressional review and legislative processes.

Secretary Norton told the Committee the Navy's Vanguard program had been slowed down by the offices of Assistant Secretary of Defense (Comptroller) W. J. McNeil and the Budget Bureau. The two offices, in combination, he said, held up funds which had been set aside for the Vanguard program.

Indirect Effects Are "Enormous"

The "difficulty of getting funding and getting it on time," he informed the Committee, "had enormous indirect effects on the program." As a result, the Vanguard project experienced a "tremendous number of difficulties which involved a tremendous number of man-hours of consultation in order to straighten it out."

Secretary Gates had testified earlier that "the process of review within the Department of Defense is a very long and tortuous one." He agreed that the longest delays are created by the DoD committee system, but also come "from the staff organizations of the Assistant Secretaries of Defense." He said "there have been great delays" at times in getting money from the Bureau of the Budget or the Defense Department Comptroller despite the fact that funds already have been appropriated by the Congress.
